The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

1. Introduction

Following several years of growth, the UK retail sector is showing signs of a slow-down in 2008. Strong brands are more important than ever to differentiate companies from the competition and encourage the consumer to part with cash from their increasingly squeezed wallet. Some brands will inevitably benefit from the downfall of others. Some sectors will grow and others will shrink. But what is certain is that all involved will be affected and this will be an exciting time.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008 is the definitive guide to which brands are set to weather the uncertain retail climate best. More than reflecting just sales figures, this study includes consumer sentiment towards the biggest brands on the high street, calculating the financial value of each brand in isolation. The past few years have seen several high-profile acquisitions, such as Safeway, Alliance Boots and The Early Learning Centre, and many failed attempts, such as for Marks & Spencer and Sainsbury's. This report reveals the value that investors and potential buyers would place on the brand alone – a true barometer of the health and growth prospects for any business.

Intangible Business is a leading international brand valuation consultancy, dedicated to the valuation of intangible assets for management, financial or litigation purposes. 2008 is the first year of publication for The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands and the first time ever that the values of the biggest brands that make up the UK high street have been revealed.

2. Methodology

For the purpose of this report, a retail brand is defined as any primarily consumer-facing business where it is possible to make an immediate, portable transaction with that business and where the customer buys the physical goods for their own use. This eliminates facilitators for other retailers such as eBay, service-based companies such as travel agents and mobile phone outlets, companies that sell large ticket items such as estate agents and car dealers, service companies such as banks and betting shops, as well as trade-facing businesses and wholesalers.

Brand values are a reflection of a brand's ability to generate future income. Up to five years of publicly available historical sales figures were analysed for nearly 200 of the UK's biggest retailers. A panel of retail experts were engaged to score each brand on a series of measures to determine the strength of each brand. Each brand was then valued by combining the sales figures with qualitative brand data, using the relief-from-royalty methodology. This then produced a list of the 100 most valuable retail brands in the UK.

Definitions of components of brand strength

Future growth:	A measure of a brand's expected growth, bearing in mind past performance and future market, sector and individual brand potential.
Price positioning:	A measure of a brand's ability to command a premium within its own category. This is also a reflection of the relative quality of the products retailed.
Customer service:	A measure of the level of service received by customers in areas such as product purchase, returns and delivery.
Brand relevancy:	A capacity to relate to the brand and a propensity to purchase: 'is it relevant to me?'
Brand awareness:	A combination of prompted and spontaneous awareness.
Brand heritage:	A brand's longevity and a measure of how embedded it is in UK culture.
Store design/experience:	The quality of the retail experience in terms of store design, ambience and ease of purchase, whether on the high street or online.

Calculating brand value

The actual brand valuation calculation is relatively straight forward. It attempts to derive the amount the brand owner would be willing to pay for its brand if it did not already own it. This approach is called the relief from royalty methodology as it calculates how much the brand owner is relieved from paying by virtue of owning the brand. The brand values are therefore in-use calculations, as per a traditional license agreement. The more complicated parts are the components that contribute to the calculation. These three stages illustrate the process, simply:

1. Forecast sales

These retail brands have been given indefinite lives as they are all market leaders, steeped in heritage and have a substantial financial position. The compound annual growth rate (CAGR) is adjusted to reflect the brand's long term ability for growth. This reflects more accurately a brand and its sector's long term growth prospects based on its current and historical performance.

2. Royalty rate

Each brand is given a score out of ten based on the measures identified, 0 = low, 10 = high. The combined scores for each measure is converted to a percentage representing the brand strength. This brand strength percentage is the applied within a royalty rate range to determine a unique royalty rate for each brand. The royalty rate ranges differ for each sector based on the sector's average profitability and level of brand contribution. For example, a royalty rate range for a retail fashion brand could be between 0% and 5%. If the brand strength score was 50%, then the royalty rate would be 2.5%.

The royalty rate appears to be a simple percentage but in fact this hides the depth of understanding required to determine a rate that reflects accurately the brand's contribution - separate from other elements of product delivery. The royalty rate is then applied to future sales and adjusted for tax at 30%.

3. Discount rate

The post-tax royalty income is then discounted to calculate the net present value of those future cash flows. The discount rates reflect the time value and risk attached to those cash flows and have been calculated for each brand, adjusted using different sector Betas from the London Business School.

Testing

Results are tested and verified by sense-checks, such as to comparable commercial transactions, known royalty rates and referenced to proprietary information on the value of leading brands, which all share similar characteristics of value cash flow generation.

4. Key issues

The Great British high street

Living in the new global economy one would assume that the UK high street would be rather cosmopolitan with retailers from different countries. However, 86% of the biggest brands on the high street originate from the UK. Every retail brand in the top 10 is British and 18 out of the top 20 is also British, supporting the adage that Britain is a nation of shopkeepers. The US has the second biggest presence on the UK high street with seven retailers of US origin. Germany and Sweden have two retailers and Denmark, Netherlands and Spain have just one. Only seven nations are represented in the top 100.

Economic climate

There have been a number of signs to indicate that the economic conditions will be challenging for UK retailers in the near future. Several retailers have gone into administration in 2008 already, such as All:sports, Base, Dolcis, Poundzone, Select, Sleep Depot, Stead & Simpson and The Works. Retail sales growth is also falling, from 3.3% in February 2007 to 1.5% in 2008, according to The British Retail Consortium. Access to debt is becoming harder, putting additional strain on both retail businesses and the consumer. However, products remain relatively inexpensive with prices of electrical goods at all time lows and competition between retailers intensive.

Online retailing

Migration online is nothing new, although it is increasing at an impressive rate. For instance, the online grocery market is only 2% of the total grocery market but is growing over six times as fast. Online consumer retail spending is set to increase from 5% in 2007, worth £14bn, to 6% in 2008, worth £17.3bn, and up to 9% by 2011, worth £29bn, according to Verdict Research. Having a functioning e-commerce site is now a prerequisite for any retailer as part of their multi-channel strategy, with some transferring to become purely online retailers, such as Dixons joining the list of pure e-retailers including Amazon, Dell and Ocado.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

Own label

The UK's grocery market accounts for 49p in every £1 of retail spending, worth about £128bn in 2007 and growing at about 4% a year. Groceries are the third largest area of household spending after housing and transport, accounting for 12.7% of all household spend. Retailers are increasingly trying to improve their own margins and gain market share from established product brands by using their own brands on products. Tesco is a great example, providing a range of own label brands to segment the market under its Tesco umbrella brand, such as Tesco Finest, Value and Healthy Eating. Another trend is to have completely new own label brands – either owned or licensed - such as what ASDA did with George or Tesco did with Cherokee, Woolworths with Ladybird, or Curry's does by licensing the Ferguson brand and creating Matsui. This own label trend is set to continue, placing even more importance on the value of the retailers own and owned brands, rather than brand owner suppliers.

Somerfield

Whistles

MOSS

M&A / consolidation

With tighter market conditions comes opportunities. 2007 saw several acquisitions and attempted acquisitions for brands including Boots and Sainsbury's. 2008 has already seen a number of brands being snapped up, put up for sale or mooted as potential targets, such as Moss, Somerfield, World Duty Free and Whistles. Brands play an important role in the motivation for purchase for many acquisitions. Although it has an extremely valuable brand, Somerfield may be more attractive to a buyer for its store portfolio and the distribution capability it could provide. However, the majority of the value of a retail business such as Whistles, which was sold to its management at the beginning of the year for an estimated £20m, would be held by the brand and its potential to increase in value in the future. Despite the macro economic environment, 2008 will inevitably see its fair share of acquisitions and consolidation as retailers and investors spot opportunities too good to wait for.

5. Best performances

Aldi, £430m

With UK sales approaching £2bn, up from half that in 2005, Aldi has succeeded in taking a share of the UK grocery market. Its value proposition appeals to the budget shopper and should enable Aldi to capitalise yet further in the coming year. Aldi also claims to be attracting high income earners, attracted by the quality of the products as well as the price. Customer satisfaction levels are also high, with its performance in Which?'s High Street Satisfaction League placing it well above the big four major supermarket groups.

Primark, £429m

Fast fashion has been a successful formula for Primark. By February 2008, it had increased its share of the UK clothing market by 2% over the previous year, taking its market share to 10.1%, just 1.3% behind high street stalwart Marks & Spencer. This makes it the second biggest clothing retailer by volume, boosted by a floor space which has increased from 3.5 million square feet to 5 million in just two years. A lack of a retail website presents a further growth opportunity for Primark.

Specsavers, £422m

Specsavers has a 30% share of the optical market in the UK and Republic of Ireland – three times that of its nearest competitor. Such dominance gives Specsavers a considerable advantage over its competitors. Its brand was voted the most trusted brand of opticians for the sixth year running by Reader's Digest in 2007. With a continued store opening programme in the UK and abroad, and a brand supported by over £20m a year and recognised by 96% of consumers, Specsavers is set for continued growth.

Lidl, £351m

Lidl is capitalising on the growing value sector of the grocery market. Its 400 properties are located on cheaper sites on the fringes of major shopping districts but attract more than just the low income demographic. It has a clear brand proposition 'where quality is cheaper' and has become a customer's favourite, coming in sixth in Which?'s High Street Satisfaction League, joint with Marks & Spencer. As part of one of Europe's largest grocers, it has ambitious expansion plans in the UK which consumers are bound to embrace.

Waterstone's, £227m

The UK book market grew by 2.1% between 2006 and 2007. Waterstone's increased its sales by 28% to £538m in 2007, buoyed by the additional scale gained through the acquisition of Ottakars. However, growth and competition is coming from the supermarkets and the internet, with Tesco now having a 5% market share. Waterstones.com was only launched in 2006 and has just 2% of the online book market. This opportunity, combined with its new distribution centre due for launch in 2008 may well give Waterstone's the momentum to grow even more.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

Wickes, £181m

Now firmly integrated into the Travis Perkins stable, Wickes' sales have increased from £760m in 2005 to £930m in 2007. Its positioning is differentiated from the more mainstream B&Q and Homebase, as an approachable brand with trade credentials, appealing to both trade buyers and consumers. Wickes has 180 stores throughout the UK as well as a comprehensive online commerce site. With consumers traditionally spending more on home improvement when housing markets collapse and with the momentum of 11% annual growth, Wickes is in a good position.

Play, £152m

A short, relevant .com domain name is what every brand wants. Play.com has this and more as its brand ensures its relevance across all entertainment sectors. Play.com now retails a variety of electronic products, from computer games to computers, TVs to CDs as well as recently launching high quality MP3 music downloads from just 65p. The brand is highly relevant with its youthful target audience and is building engagement with events such as Play.com Live, held in March 2008 at Wembley Stadium in front of over 20,000 people. With a Christmas audience of over eight million, Play.com has the scale and potential to continue its impressive growth.

Ocado, £110m

Launched in 2002, Ocado is the only pure online major grocery supplier. With sales growing at a rapid rate, up from £230m in 2006 to around £300m by the end of 2007, Ocado appears to be doing well. Losses of almost £300m since it started could tell a different story, although these losses fell in 2007 to only £30m with maybe a breakeven position or even a profit forecast for 2008. Now it's available to 13.5 million households across England, with a new focus of value pricing competing directly with category leader Tesco, a premium brand and with quality products through its partnership with Waitrose, Ocado's star could be about to rise.

Laura Ashley, £100m

After a few years in a turnaround situation, Laura Ashley is coming back, posting annual profits up 62% to £20m in March 2008. It is continuing its ambitious store realignment programme, opening 33 new stores in 2007 with the same or even more planned for 2008. The quintessentially English brand is not only successful in the UK but growing worldwide. With its growth prospects, ungeared balance sheet, positive sales and profit momentum – not to mention its potential as an acquirer, with Moss Bros in its sights – Laura Ashley is well set for continued growth.

Jane Norman, £66m

Sales at Jane Norman have grown at an impressive compound average of 36% since 2004, now up to £133m. It has a strong brand which connects with its clearly defined target audience of women aged between 16 and 28. The brand is positioned as being sexy and feminine, for the ambitious and confident female. With over 150 stores throughout the UK, Jane Norman also benefits from synergies of being part of the Baugur group of fashion retailers, enabling it to produce quality products at value prices.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

6. Worst performances

Woolworths, £297m

Once a high street favourite, Woolworth's has sort of lost its way and lacks differentiation, selling a bit of everything but not quite enough of each. Sales have been steadily falling and its debt is now up to £246m in 2008, from £113 a year ago. Its 818 stores have good high street positions but like-for-like sales fell 3.2 per cent to March 2008. Although there is scope for Woolworths to improve its margins, this turnover is set to fall still further as the retailer downsizes and relocates stores.

WOOLWORTHS

Matalan, £254m

Matalan has not had a particularly good year. Its sale fell by 4% to just over £1bn and its share of the UK clothing market fell from 5.7% to 5.1% during 2007. During a time when value and discount clothing retailers are performing well, with Primark's market share increasing by 2% to 10.1%, Tesco's market share up 1.1% to 9.3% and George at Asda up 0.4% to 8.7% for example, Matalans's performance must be doubly worrying for the retailer. Its brand lacks consumer relevance although with an effective website – unlike Primark – Matalan does have the opportunity to reverse its recent fortunes.

MATALAN

Sports World, £160m

Sports World is the primary sports retailer of the Sports Direct International. Just over a year ago it floated on the London Stock Exchange at around 300p and one year later its price had fallen to under 100p. This performance is reflective of the performance of its retail business which has seen sales fall. Management distraction has also contributed to this weak performance as well as macro impacts such as England's failure to reach the Euro 2008 football championships. Its pile-it-high, sell-it-cheap strategy is at odds with the market trend for premiumisation. Although with brands such as Everlast, Lonsdale, Dunlop, Slazenger and Karrimor in its stable, economies of scale through other retail stores it owns, and an expansion programme, it maybe time for Sports World's turnaround.

SPORTS

MFI, £111m

After two decades at the top, MFI recently lost its crown as the UK's biggest furniture retailer to Argos. Its market share fell to 4.8% at the end of 2007 from 7.9% in 2003. The brand has been tainted by various management upsets, product and delivery issues. The new management, however, is investing £125m to help turn MFI around, £65m of which is being invested in a state-of-the-art national distribution centre. Increased competition from all angles is making trading conditions more difficult but this new investment will certainly help MFI on its path back to its former position.

7. Ones to watch

Early Learning Centre, £65m

The Early Learning Centre was bought in 2007 by Mothercare for £85m. Its distribution has been increased from 210 stand alone stores to inclusion as concessions in 73 of Mothercare's out-of-town stores with more expansion planned. For over 30 years the brand has been one of the first ports of calls for children's toys. However, it ran up losses of £9.8m on sales of £186m prior to its sale to Mothercare. Now under new ownership and with the synergies and economies of scale this brings, Early Learning Centre is set for considerable growth both in the UK and overseas.

Ann Summers, £51m

Ann Summers' brand positioning is clear: accessible sex toys and related products. The business has not been doing particularly well in recent years, with sales falling from a high of £117m in 2005 to £110m in 2007 with profits falling as well. However, a new focus on the brand has seen extensions such as Ann Summers Bingo launched in July 2007 and Ann Summers Casino in the beginning of 2008. Its website is also being relaunched. 60% of visitors to its website are men although just 20% of visitors to its stores are men. This represents an opportunity for Ann Summers to improve on its ranking of 114 in our league table with a brand value of £51m. And with 7,500 Ann Summers Party Organisers holding 4,000 Ann Summers Parties a week, the brand has a very loyal following.

World Duty Free, £51m

In March 2008, ownership of World Duty Free passed from BAA to Autogrill for which Autogrill paid £545m. This gives its new owners a confirmed 12-year contract to sell goods at BAA's seven UK airports. With the recent launch of Heathrow's Terminal 5, this creates an even greater opportunity for the retailer to access the additional 27m passengers expected through the new terminal. Autogrill, the Italian caterer controlled by the Benetton family, also runs restaurants on motorways and in airports so is able to bring synergies to the brand to increase its attraction to consumers. The brand is worth £51m and falls short of the top 100 at number 115.

Boden, £57m

With sales now over £100m Boden is now firmly established in the fashion community. It despatches over 3,000 orders everyday from orders received primarily from its catalogues and website. It also has two shops in Surrey and London. It was founded in 1991 has gone from selling menswear to womenswear and Baby Boden which was launched in 2007. Sales have steadily increased and the brand has a loyal following. Boden now has a very strong platform from which to launch a more aggressive expansion strategy with potential to extend internationally and into other product categories such as furniture and homeware. At £57m, the brand falls just short of the top 100 this year, at number 106, but next year it may just make it.

Jaeger, £45m

Jaeger is riding the wave of the revival of British heritage fashion brands such as Aquascutum, Burberry and Pringle. Since the appointment of Belinda Earl as Group Chief Executive in May 2004, profitability has changed from a £3m deficit to £71m. The number of stores in the UK have also increased from 89 to 120. Falling 22 places short of the top 100 most valuable retail brands in the UK, Jaeger's brand alone is worth £45m. If its rejuvenation continues, it could well be a contender for the top 100 next year.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

8. The Top 10

TESCO
Every little helps

£8.6bn Tesco

Being the UK's biggest retailer, with sales of £32bn, it was almost inevitable that Tesco would have the most valuable brand on the high street. Worth £8.6bn in 2008, the brand has a dominant position in both the supermarket and convenience store markets. However, early signs in 2008 indicate that Tesco's market share dropped to 31% in the UK grocery sector over the year to March 2008, down from 31.2% the year before. Its consistently low prices, quality products, growing online offer and excellent management will be key ingredients in fuelling further growth throughout 2008.

£4.9bn Sainsbury's

Following growth of 6% a year, Sainsbury's is the second most valuable retail brand on the high street with a brand worth £4.9bn. Its 800 stores give it national distribution and a strong local presence in most areas. It has recently been subject to various takeover approaches which, now over, may free up management focus to continue business growth, its market share having dropped from 16.4% to 16.2% in the year to March 2008. Its "Try something new today" slogan, introduced in September 2005, continues to prove successful supporting a brand that has been a national favourite since 1869.

Sainsbury's
Try something new today

£3.9bn Marks & Spencer

After several years in the doldrums, Marks & Spencer, the clothing, grocery and household goods retailer is back on top. It is the biggest clothing retailer in the UK with a market share of 11.4% and sales in its clothing and home division rose last year by 9.6% to £4bn. Its slogan 'Your M&S' has proven successful since its introduction in 2004, increasing its relevance with its consumers. A walk round Marks & Spencer's food outlets demonstrates the unique strength of the brand as every product is an own-label product – virtually no other brand can be purchased in Marks & Spencer other than Marks & Spencer.

YOUR M&S

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

£3.6bn ASDA

Walmart-owned ASDA is the UK's second biggest grocer in the UK with a 17.1% market share in 2008, up 0.2% from 2007. Its regional roots, focus on low price and relative lack of heritage put it at a disadvantage to Sainsbury's, which has a fractionally lower market share yet higher brand value. The low value grocery segment is, however, growing benefiting brands such as Lidl and Aldi. ASDA is well positioned to challenge these newer entrants with its greater distribution and economies of scale through its American parent company.

£2.6bn Morrisons

Morrisons appears to have successfully integrated its transformational acquisition of Safeway which it purchased in 2004. Its share of the UK grocery market rose the fastest, by half a percent to 11.6% from March 2007 to March 2008. Its use of celebrities such as Denise Van Outen, Lulu and Alan Hansen to promote the brand's fresh products has also been well received by customers. The brand is worth £2.6bn in 2008 but after 55 years at the helm, it will be interesting to see how the brand and business reacts in the era post Sir Ken Morrison.

£1.9bn Boots

Since it was formed with a single shop in Nottingham in 1849, Boots has grown to become the UK's leading chemists with over 1,500 high street stores. The brand's strong heritage means it is deeply rooted in the UK's culture, helping fuel its brand value of £1.9bn in the UK alone. Following its merger with Alliance UniChem in 2005, the combined business was bought for £11bn in 2007 by Kohlberg Kravis Roberts, the private equity firm. The injection of cash and international scale these events precipitated will no doubt ensure the brand's continued development and success.

The UK's Most Valuable Retail Brands 2008

Argos

£1.4bn The co-operative

Covering the grocery and pharmaceutical sectors, The co-operative retail brand is one of the biggest on the high street. It has over 2,000 retail stores and 1.5 million economically active members, making it the UK's largest co-operative. Its brand crosses many sectors but its retail arms generate over £6bn a year. Its loyal membership, ethical values and sheer size help drive its brand value of £1.4bn in the UK.

The co-operative

£1.2bn Waitrose

Waitrose, part of the John Lewis Partnership, is the ninth most valuable retail brand in the UK in 2008, worth £1.2bn. Its sales increases 3.6% to approximately £4bn, giving it an increased market share of 3.9%. Its premium brand status appeals to a premium demographic who are willing to pay for quality food. Its share of the UK organics market is over 18% and Fairtrade 8.6%. With its brand well understood by consumers and sales up 47% in four years its brand value is set to increase as well.

Waitrose

£1.1bn John Lewis

At £1.1bn, the value of the John Lewis brand is around half its annual turnover. With 26 large stores, John Lewis is a powerful force on the high street as well as online. The John Lewis website grew by 40% between 2007 and 2008 and with 90% of business being repeat business, there is a strong customer loyalty. As the 15th biggest retailer in the UK, John Lewis is punching above its weight, entering the top 100 at number 10.
